Your always-on international enrolment office

An integrated international enrolment function for British boarding schools

The short version

International recruitment is no longer a seasonal activity a school can run in the margins of a registrar's week. It has become a strategic function, and like the other functions a school chooses not to build from scratch, it rewards being run properly more than being run in-house.

The shift it asks for is one of posture: from filling places to finding and enrolling the right pupils. Pupils who fit a particular school, thrive within it, contribute to its boarding community and support the academic, cultural and nationality balance the school wants. BEP is designed to recruit and evidence that fit rather than chase volume for its own sake.

British Enrolment Partners is your international enrolment function, outsourced and integrated. It coordinates the whole journey into one joined-up process, from recruitment strategy and market research through to arrival and settling, for every international pupil and whoever introduced them. There is no exclusivity and no two-track system: your existing agents and their commission structures stay exactly as they are, and BEP coordinates across all of them.

For a school without an international function, BEP is that function. For a school with a team, BEP scaffolds it. Built and run by operators who have set up and turned around British boarding schools, it is the function itself, run or supported for you, with the school retaining control of admissions decisions and pupil fit at all times.

Enrolment, not admissions

Independent education has accepted that, outside the classroom, it must be run as a commercial operation. Estates, catering, finance and IT were professionalised years ago. For many schools, marketing and admissions have not caught up, and you can hear it in the language. "Admissions" belongs to an era when families came to you. The commercial reality is enrolment, a function a school has to actively drive, in the most competitive international market the sector has seen. BEP is built for that reality, and runs international enrolment as the strategic commercial function it has become.

We've sat in your chair

BEP is built and run by global enrolment experts, not by a marketing agency.

They have not only run international recruitment but set up and taken over British boarding schools and made them financially successful through the hardest decade the sector has faced: COVID, the cost-of-living crisis and now VAT on fees. They have sat in your chair, carried the cost and the risk, and filled their own boarding houses before being asked to help fill anyone else's.

That is why the function can work from the first day rather than being built from scratch: established overseas offices, recruitment teams in key markets, a managed network of more than 700 vetted agents, and working relationships across the regions that matter. These are not promises to be funded later. They are a working capability you plug into, run by people who do the work rather than advise on it.

It's outgrown
the registrar's desk

International recruitment has quietly become a strategic function, but in most schools it still sits in the margins of a registrar's or a head's week, alongside everything else they carry. That mismatch creates a familiar pattern.

There is rarely a dedicated specialist or a presence on the ground in priority markets, so relationships are built in bursts and then go quiet between visits. There is rarely the time to travel, coordinate agents and follow up every contact from a fair, so effort leaks away after the event that paid for it. And there is rarely the budget or the system to see the whole pipeline, so decisions are made without the visibility they deserve.

None of this reflects a lack of ambition. It reflects a function that has outgrown the way schools are set up to run it.

Why we're not another agent

Most of the market reaches the world from the outside and in pieces: agents who make introductions and move on, networks you join, and fairs you attend twice a year. BEP is different because it is built around pupil fit and operational delivery. It coordinates every pupil and every agent into one process, asks for no exclusivity, and flexes to be your function where you have none or the scaffold for your team where you do. A full service table at the end of this document shows how the function works across each stage of the journey.

BEP IS

The coordinator of your whole international recruitment and enrolment function, one joined-up process across every pupil and every agent

A strategy-led function, using market research and recruitment expertise to identify the strongest markets, channels and pupil profiles for your school

A permanent, in-territory presence, not a visit twice a year

A market-wide view no single school can hold, hundreds of agents and many markets seen every day, not one school's lens

A single point of accountability from first enquiry to enrolment, arrival, settling and family communication beyond

Aligned with retention, paid across a pupil's enrolment so it is invested in pupils staying and thriving, not only arriving

Flexible by size, your function where you have none, the scaffold for your team where you do

BEP IS NOT

An agent making introductions

A network or association you pay to join

A marketplace built around parents browsing

A demand for exclusivity, or a replacement for the agents you trust

What we'd do for you

These are not separate services to choose from. They are the working parts of one coordinated enrolment function, run together to find the right pupils, nurture families, support agents and convert interest into enrolment, whoever introduced the pupil.

- Market research and recruitment strategy. Experts assess your positioning, target markets, competitor context, pupil profile, nationality balance and channel priorities, then build a practical recruitment roadmap.
- Agent coordination. Your existing agents and any BEP introduces, managed into one accountable process rather than a scatter of separate relationships.
- Enrolment coordination. Outreach, applications and follow-up connected across every pupil and every agent, not run on two tracks.
- Family communication and liaison. Consistent contact from first enquiry through arrival and into the year, keeping overseas families informed as their child settles.
- Application handling. A structured route from enquiry to enrolment, including online entry assessment for every year group.
- Market development. Sustained in-territory presence and representation in your priority regions.
- CRM and visibility. Your pipeline and your data, visible to you and owned by you.
- Reporting and evidence. A clear view of intake by market and the balance and fit of who you are enrolling, not only a count of enquiries.
- Events and activity. Familiarisation (fam) trips, roadshows and fairs, planned and supported rather than improvised.
- Digital marketing. Experienced campaign management across the international and country-specific channels that reach your markets.

You set the markets, the pupil profile and the nationality balance, and the function recruits for fit against them rather than for volume. You approve every offer, and the pastoral care of your pupils remains yours; BEP runs the recruitment coordination and family-facing communication around it. Because the function can only recruit for fit by understanding what makes your school distinctive, the work begins with your character and carries your story into the market, never a template.

What you'd pay

BEP offers two partnership routes, matched to the school's current international market position, academic profile, location, existing recruitment traction and the level of operational support required. The fixed retainer suits schools with strong existing demand; the performance route carries a 15% operation fee on new international enrolments for the duration of the pupil's enrolment, which keeps BEP's return tied to outcomes and to pupils staying and thriving. The most appropriate route is confirmed after a review of the school's profile and objectives, using the Partnership Criteria and Commercial Structure set out below.

Who it's for

Partnership route	Typical school profile	Indicative criteria	Best suited to
Fixed Retainer Partnership	Top-ranked, well-known schools with strong existing international demand.	• Within approximately 1 hour of a major international airport. • London, Oxford and Cambridge areas preferable, or another highly marketable location. • A Level results typically 60%+ A*-A or equivalent. • Strong university destinations. • Strong existing demand, market recognition or established agent enquiry flow.	Schools that already have strong market appeal and do not need BEP to build demand from scratch, but want BEP to operate or scaffold the international enrolment function.
Performance Partnership	Middle to top-ranked schools with reasonable existing international traction and a preference for no upfront fee.	• Within approximately 1.5 hours of a major international airport. • At least one distinctive strength for the region, such as academics, sport, STEM, arts, boarding, pastoral care, EAL or university preparation. • A Level results typically 50%+ A*-A or equivalent. • Flexible to accept short-term students where appropriate. • Able to offer scholarships or bursaries to suitable international students. • Some existing agent, partner-school or international family traction.	Schools with clear market appeal and reasonable conversion potential that prefer a success-based arrangement rather than a fixed monthly fee.

These criteria are a guide, not a rigid checklist. A school with a particularly strong or distinctive proposition may still be considered even where it does not meet every indicative criterion. BEP weighs overall marketability, boarding capacity, admissions responsiveness, academic and co-curricular strengths, international student support, university destinations, location, fee competitiveness and willingness to engage actively in the partnership.

Two ways we work together

Fixed Retainer

Schools with strong existing demand and clear market appeal.

£4,800 + VAT per month

No operation fee on enrolments.

A predictable fixed cost for schools that want BEP to operate or scaffold the international enrolment function without an enrolment-based charge.

Performance Partnership

Schools with reasonable existing international traction.

15% operation fee

on the fee income from new international enrolments, for the duration of the pupil's enrolment. No monthly retainer.

A success-based model linked to enrolment outcomes and to pupils staying and thriving, since BEP earns across the pupil's enrolment rather than once at entry.

What we mean by these terms

Operation fee. The fee is for operating and coordinating the international enrolment function, not for simply introducing students, which is why BEP uses this term rather than commission.

Total fee income generated. To be defined in the agreement. The recommended definition is the net fee income received by the school from a new international enrolment supported through the BEP function, for each year the pupil remains enrolled.

Minimum term. Retainer fees are payable monthly but linked to an initial 12-month partnership term, so BEP can invest properly in onboarding, market development, systems and delivery.

Suitability confirmation. The most suitable route is confirmed after reviewing the school's academic profile, location, boarding capacity, current international footprint, brand appeal, recruitment objectives and operational readiness.

How we'd begin

The honest place to begin is not a contract but a question: where is your current international enrolment strong, and where is it thin? BEP starts with a no-cost, no-obligation audit of your coverage and process against the markets, pupil profile and nationality balance you want, under an NDA with a written undertaking not to approach any agent it sees. The audit includes a market and recruitment-strategy review by experienced specialists, so the school can see where the clearest opportunities lie before committing to a route. Where your setup is already strong, we will say so.

Only where we both see real opportunity does anything follow. From there: agree the route that fits you; a school visit and immersion so BEP understands your proposition and priorities; a market and recruitment strategy; an agreed roadmap of markets, activity and campaigns; then BEP takes up the coordination, running or scaffolding the function as one joined-up process. Founding School Partners move first and enter the next recruitment cycle already coordinated rather than still setting up.

Joining as a Founding School Partner

BEP is forming a small, deliberately curated group of Founding School Partners, not opening membership at volume. The cohort is kept limited and the overlap between schools managed, so that each school receives meaningful attention and a clear place in the market. Selection is on alignment with the model, readiness for international growth, operational fit, pupil-profile clarity and appetite for a long-term working relationship.

Founding School Partners shape the model as it develops and enter on the clearest commercial terms BEP will offer. Whichever route a school takes, it keeps its existing agents and structures, commits to no exclusivity, and gains a single coordinated function across its whole international intake. The advantage is not simply joining early; it is entering the next recruitment cycle with the function already coordinated rather than still being built.

From first enquiry to settled pupil

Stage	What BEP provides	Benefit to the school
ONE Recruitment network management	Manages the school's existing recruitment network, including agents, counsellors and partner-school relationships, with regular updates, coordination and training so partners understand the school's offer and priorities.	Existing relationships are better supported and less dependent on the registrar or head managing every contact directly.
TWO New agent and partner development	Develops new agent, counsellor and partner-school relationships in target markets, supported by BEP's in-market teams and wider international network.	Access to new recruitment channels and markets without having to build overseas networks alone.
THREE Lead generation	Generates enquiries through agents, partner schools, digital campaigns, recruitment events, roadshows, workshops and fairs.	International recruitment becomes consistent and proactive, rather than relying on occasional fairs or ad hoc enquiries.
FOUR Lead nurturing	Follows up with prospective students and families, answers questions, maintains contact and supports the journey from first enquiry to serious application.	Fewer enquiries are lost, and families receive timely, informed and consistent communication.
FIVE School matching and pupil fit	Works with families to understand the student's academic profile, English level, subject interests, boarding suitability, aspirations and expectations, then guides the student toward the most suitable school.	Recruitment focuses on the right pupil for the right school, rather than simply increasing enquiry volume.
SIX Application and assessment	Supports the application process, including document collection, follow-up, subject-choice guidance and a standardised online entry test for all year groups.	Applications are more structured, easier to track and more consistent across markets.

Stage	What BEP provides	Benefit to the school
SEVEN Offer, acceptance and conversion	Maintains communication with the family after offer, supports acceptance and joining arrangements, and helps convert accepted offers into confirmed enrolments.	Stronger conversion, with fewer accepted pupils dropping away through lack of follow-up.
EIGHT Guardianship and pre-arrival compliance	Assists with guardianship where required and supports collection of pre-arrival information: medical details, parental consent, uniform, subject choices, flight details, eVisa share codes and other items the school requires.	Better-prepared records before arrival, supporting admissions, boarding, safeguarding and UKVI preparation.
NINE Pre-departure preparation	Delivers online or in-country pre-departure workshops for students and families, covering practical preparation, expectations, travel, boarding life and communication with the school.	Students and families arrive better prepared, easing the transition into school life.
TEN Arrival and settling follow-up	Follows up after enrolment with families and agents, sharing appropriate updates on how students are settling where agreed with the school, and can forward newsletters and key updates.	Families and agents stay informed beyond enrolment, improving confidence, satisfaction and long-term relationships, and supporting retention.

How to begin

A short conversation and the no-cost audit of your current setup. BEP reviews fit against the founding criteria, identifies where the opportunity is strongest, and holds a fuller discussion where there is alignment. A limited number of schools will be invited to become Founding School Partners, with priority onboarding and a coordinated path to launch.

Questions and answers

How is this different from using agents, or a network like BBSN?

An agent makes introductions. A network gives you access and a fair twice a year. Useful things, but neither runs the whole process from a family's first enquiry to a pupil settled in your boarding house and a family kept informed through the year. BEP coordinates that whole function for you, your existing agents included, into one managed process rather than a scatter of separate relationships.

The difference is scope and accountability. An agent is paid to introduce, then moves on. BEP is engaged to run, or to scaffold, the entire international enrolment function across every pupil and whoever introduced them, and is accountable for how the process works, not for a single placement.

We value our existing agent relationships. Do we have to give them up?

No, and the model depends on you keeping them. Every agent and every commission structure you have stays exactly as it is. BEP does not replace your agents or compete with them; it coordinates all of them, yours and any it introduces, into one managed process.

There is no exclusivity, and no argument about who sourced which pupil, because BEP is paid for running the function rather than for claiming individual placements. That is what lets it sit across your whole international intake instead of carving out a separate track.

Who is behind BEP?

BEP is built and run by global enrolment experts who have not only run international recruitment, but set up and taken over British boarding schools and made them financially successful through the hardest decade the sector has faced: COVID, the cost-of-living crisis and now VAT on fees.

That matters because it means BEP does the work rather than advising on it. The people behind it have sat in your chair, carried the cost and the risk, and filled their own boarding houses before being asked to help fill anyone else's. The function works from the first day because it already exists: established overseas offices, recruitment teams in key markets, and a managed network of more than 700 vetted agents.

What will this cost us, and how does it compare with doing it ourselves?

BEP is priced for running, or scaffolding, your whole international enrolment function, so the honest comparison is with building that function in-house rather than with a single agent's fee. A standing in-house operation, a specialist salary and its on-costs, travel, fairs and systems, is a six-figure commitment carried every year, filled or not. BEP is designed to deliver the same function for less, while raising the quality of it.

There are two routes, matched to your profile and the support you need. A Fixed Retainer Partnership for top-ranked schools with strong existing demand: £4,800 + VAT per month, with no enrolment operation fee. And a Performance Partnership for schools that prefer no retainer: a 15% enrolment operation fee on the fee income from new international enrolments, for the duration of the pupil's enrolment.

Two things follow from charging across a pupil's enrolment rather than once at entry. BEP is remunerated for running the function, not for introducing pupils. And because it keeps earning only while pupils stay and thrive, its interest is aligned with yours: recruitment and retention together, not a one-off placement.

Does outsourcing this mean losing control of who joins our school?

The opposite. You set the pupil profile and the nationality balance you want, and they are written into the plan rather than left to chance.

The honest risk in any commission-driven recruitment is a drift toward the single easiest market, because volume is where the money is. The model is built against that drift in three concrete ways: the opening audit identifies any existing over-concentration; agreed mix targets sit in the working plan; and the reporting shows intake by market, so a glut is visible long before it forms. You approve every offer. Coordinated delivery, owned decisions.

How do you make sure the pupils you bring will fit and thrive here, not just enrol?

This is increasingly the first question schools ask, and it is the right one. A place filled by a pupil who survives rather than thrives serves no one, the school's reputation least of all. BEP recruits for fit, not just volume: pupils suited to your particular school, its character and its academic profile, recruited against the criteria you set rather than against whoever is easiest to place.

BEP also stays with the family through arrival and into the year, and because it is paid across a pupil's enrolment, it is invested in that pupil settling and staying, not only arriving. The pastoral care itself remains yours, as it must. What BEP owns is the input to thriving, the right pupils in a balanced intake and the family kept close, and the data to see who you are enrolling, so that fit is something you can evidence rather than hope for.

How do we know this is right for us, and won't we lose the character of our function?

You find out before committing anything. The opening audit is diagnostic, and if your international enrolment is already strong and well run, we will say there is little here for us. This is not for every school, and we would rather tell you that than sign you.

It is also important to be clear about what is, and is not, being outsourced. Outsourcing catering is not the same as outsourcing international enrolment, and we would never suggest it is. Catering never meets the family; international enrolment does. So the line is simple, and it is the school gate. Everything outside it, the markets, the agents, the enquiries, the follow-up, the applications and the in-territory work, is what BEP runs. Everything at it, the welcome, the personal relationship with a joining family, the connection that makes a family choose you and stay, remains with your admissions team on the ground. BEP knows that, away from the process, a school keeps its families through human connection, and that is yours to give. Protecting that, rather than absorbing it, is part of the integrated enrolment journey, not a carve-out from it.

On character, the fear is understandable and the answer is the reverse of it. BEP cannot recruit for fit without understanding deeply what makes your school distinctive, so the work begins by getting to know the school properly, and what it carries into the market is your story, not a template applied to every client. You keep control throughout: you set the criteria, you approve every offer, you own the data. Far from hollowing the function out, the aim is to free your own people from the in-territory grind so they can be more ambitious about your brand and your family relationships. Success looks like your own function more engaged and firing on all cylinders, not quieter.

Why do we need BEP for something our own team could do, and does it replace them?

The honest answer is structural, not a comment on your team. However good your people are, one school has one lens: its own funnel, its own handful of agents, its own enquiries. BEP sees the market itself, every day, across hundreds of agents and many schools' worth of activity. You can hire a person, but you cannot hire the market, and a single extra hire gives you one more lens, not the whole field.

What that breadth buys you in practice is knowing which markets are softening or heating this term, which agents deliver and which overpromise, what competitor schools are offering on fees and scholarships, and where a visa or regulatory change is about to bite. No single funnel accumulates that. And BEP does the work rather than advising on it, getting into the weeds on your behalf.

As for replacing your team, it flexes to your size. For a school with no international function, BEP is that function; for a school with a team, BEP scaffolds it, taking the in-territory travel, the agent coordination and the family liaison off them so their work reaches further. It never touches your domestic admissions and registry team, and your own data stays ring-fenced and owned by you, so the market-wide view never means your pupils or intelligence go to anyone else.

Do we have to work with you exclusively?

No, and the model is built so the question does not arise. BEP coordinates across every agent and channel you already use rather than competing for placements, so there is nothing to be exclusive about. You keep your existing relationships and add BEP over the top as the coordinating function.

A school that felt it had to hand its entire international intake to any single provider would be taking on a concentration risk we would advise against, which is exactly why BEP is the coordinator of your channels, not a replacement for them.

How do we know you will prioritise our school over easier ones to sell?

The model removes the old pull. BEP is not paid per pupil it personally recruits, so it has no incentive to chase the easiest placements or the easiest markets. It is paid to run or scaffold your whole function, which means its interest is your total international result, balanced and on-profile, not a handful of quick wins.

Because it is paid across a pupil's enrolment, it is also invested in the pupils you take staying and doing well, which pulls in the same direction as you. On top of that, the founding group is deliberately small, your priority markets are agreed and named at the start, and the reporting shows exactly what was done in each of them.

Doesn't relying on one provider create long-term risk?

The model is built so you are never dependent for anything you had before BEP. Your agents remain your agents, your commission structures stay in place, and your pipeline and data are yours throughout.

BEP runs the coordination layer over the top. If the arrangement ends, your relationships and your data remain with you and the process reverts to you; you are not left having handed your intake to someone you cannot replace. Dependency comes from opacity, and the model is built to be transparent enough that you are never trapped by it.

Who owns the families, the data and the pipeline?

You do. Every enquiry and family record sits in a CRM you can see throughout and export in full, in a usable format, on request or on exit. BEP runs the activity; the school owns the record. If the relationship ends, the data leaves with you.

The same data does more than track a pipeline. It shows the balance and fit of who you are enrolling, market by market, so the composition of your international intake is something you can see and evidence rather than discover after the fact.

What's involved in getting started, and what do we commit to up front?

Less than you would expect, and the first step costs nothing. BEP begins with an audit of your current international enrolment setup, your agent coverage, your process and where pupils are coming from, against the markets and pupil profile you want. It is carried out under an NDA, with a written undertaking not to approach or work around any agent it sees, and it includes a market and recruitment-strategy review so you can see where the clearest opportunities lie before committing.

The audit is diagnostic. Where your setup is already strong, we will say so. Only where it surfaces real opportunity does anything follow, and you choose the route, Fixed Retainer or Performance, that fits how you want to commit.
